

Nelson Creek Trail from Roslyn

Suncadia would like to invite you to enjoy a beautiful trail along Nelson Creek to several riverside spots along the Cle Elum River. This trail is open to the public and good for either hiking or mountain biking. The distance from Nelson Dairy Road to the end of the trail is just over 2 miles. (See the map on the third page for more distances.)

Right now the route is an “out and back” trail – so you can turn around at any point and head for home! Blue arrows indicate advancing farther. Red arrows indicate the return direction. A red and a blue arrow next to each other pointing down indicate the end of the marked trail. Remember it is “out and back,” to the end of the trail and back to Nelson Dairy Road will be more than 4 miles.

Always stay on the marked route! There are many small routes that connect to the marked corridor but most are blocked with logs. Many of these areas are environmentally sensitive and it is easy to get lost when you leave the main route.

Treat all wildlife with caution and respect. Under no circumstance should they be fed. Keep your distance and avoid causing stress to wildlife. For your safety, hike in a group and during daylight hours.

Remember to bring water and sunscreen. Although it won't work in certain areas, it is a good idea to have a cell phone. Some days, bug repellent is a good idea too.

The start of Nelson Creek trail is an old dirt road off of Nelson Dairy/Memorial Road. Follow these steps:

1. Make your way to the old dirt road off of Nelson Dairy/Memorial Road. To get to the dirt road from Roslyn follow these steps:
 - a. Start on Pennsylvania Ave near The Brick and the City Administration Building.
 - b. Follow Pennsylvania Ave to 5th St and take a right.
 - c. Follow 5th St and take a left onto Nelson Dairy/Memorial Road.
 - d. After a short distance, the pavement ends and the road turns into gravel.
 - e. The dirt road will be 0.1 mile after the end of the pavement on the left. This is the beginning of the trail.
 - f. The dirt road has a gate across it but go around the gate and down the trail.
2. Follow the old dirt road towards Swiftwater Drive. As the dirt road approaches Swiftwater Drive, turn left onto a very short, narrow trail that takes you to a paved path. At the paved path turn right. There should be signs pointing the way.
3. The trail along Nelson Creek to the Cle Elum River continues across the street from the end of the paved path, right next to the Yellow Bell Court street sign.

4. Follow this trail and the arrows carefully down to an old dirt road. When you reach the road take a right, and travel down the road. Straight ahead will be blocked with logs so take a left and go down the hill. Just down the hill the dirt road will meet a gravel road.
5. Take a right onto the gravel road. After you make the turn, the stream bed of Nelson Creek will be on your left. Follow this road and the arrows towards the Cle Elum River.
6. As you approach the Cle Elum River, Nelson Creek stays to your left and the main road bends to the right. You will see a “Y” in the road with blue arrows that point both left and right. The main route is to the right but, if you want a small side adventure with a beautiful view to the river, go left down the steep slope. The two arrows pointing down indicate the end of the marked trail. From here you can go on short walks either left or right. You ultimately have to turn around and head back up the slope to the turn.
7. Back on the main route, continue down the road. Follow the arrows through or around the gate. Immediately after the gate, veer to your left and follow the arrows. Here the arrows will be sparsely spaced but there is only one road to follow so stay on it.
8. This road takes you down to a beautiful meadow at the river bank. Near the river bank, you will see another set of blue arrows pointing both left and right indicating another “Y” in the trail. To the left is another streamside area.
9. Following the arrows to the left leads you to a beautiful streamside spot. The end is marked here with an arrow of each color pointing down. Be careful as the river flows are variable in early summer. Never under any circumstances go swimming or inner-tubing in the river.

10. For more adventure, go back to the “Y” and follow the road and arrows, to the right. This part of the trail is a bit narrower and can be sporadically muddy in the spring and early summer. Follow the road, arrows and stay to the left. The trail will take you to an abandoned fan-house, an artifact from the mining years that was used to ventilate the mineshafts more than a thousand feet below. Don't be surprised if there is spring water pouring out of the old building. Also don't be surprised if it has a sulfurous (rotten egg) smell to it. Do not approach or enter the fan-house building!

11. There is a break in the arrows just before the fan-house, but if you continue through the grassy, open area and past the fan-house, the arrows will pick-up again.
12. If you continue on past the fan-house, stay to the left. There will be an area where four roads meet, the arrows should indicate to the left. Take note of the direction you came from so that when you return, finding the arrows and correct road is easier. At this point and beyond you may need to look more carefully for arrows, they are there but may be a little more difficult to see than before.
13. The road winds its way through some thicker portions of bushes and opens up at a nice open area near the river. In 2008, this is where a mother duck raised her family of four ducklings. The end of the road is just beyond here.
14. Continue along the road until a large open area near the Cle Elum River. This is the end of the marked trail. Again, the end of the marked trail is indicated by two arrows pointing down. There are good picnic/resting areas if you walk a little ways to the left or right of the end of the trail. Going beyond this general area is not recommended.
15. Enjoy your adventure and always be careful and respectful of the natural environment!
